

Here are two dramatic shots of Cahuenga Peak's west ridge and Burbank Peak, with Ginger Rogers Tree in silhouette. Raphael O. Quezada shot them both, about 20 minutes apart, at sunset, March 8, 2010. "The sky was gorgeous that evening and the clouds were fully motivated by the jet-stream." explains Rafael.

Please do your part to Save Cahuenga Peak. Write your check today to:

The Trust for Public Land
"Save Cahuenga Peak Project"
570 West Avenue 26, Suite 300
Los Angeles, CA 90065

Your donation is tax deductible

"When I was a child, my grandfather told me that "Cahuenga" is a native word (Gabrieliño-Tongva) that means "place of mountains". This is a spiritual place, the point from where all the regional mountain ranges can be seen, and it was named for the visual power it bestows."

—Rafael O. Quezada

